THE importance of the intelligence contained in the Bouter's telegram published in vesterday's issue is not easily estimated. It was hoped by many that the inauguration of new reign in Turkey would bring about pacification of the insurgent provinces, or a loast would have the effect of confining the insurrection to its present limits. Austria has throughout exercised a tight rein upon Montenegro and sought to prevent Servi from joining the rebels. But it soems either that national batted of the Turk, or Russian intrigue, has been too much for Austrian diplomacy, for both Montenegro and Servia have entered the lists against the Ottoman rule. It may even turn out that the fall of ABDUL Azız has hastened this movement, by compelling Russia to push an matters for fear the contest, which she hapes, no doubt will prove mortal to the Sick Man, should be brought to an amicable conclusion. Clearly that would not have been the Russian game The Slavonic and Greek population of Turkey have known to be under the influence of the Czar's Government, and will unbesitatingly dance to its piping. loap the barrier of the Czar's caution. In the absence of further information, it can only be supposed that the action taken by Scryia and Montenegro is tacitly, if not avowedly, approved at St. Petersburg. The accession of Serviz and Montenegro to the ranks of the insurgent host will materially assist in protracting the struggle, and will almost inevitably widen the area of conflict still further. Servia contains about one million people; and is virtually an independent State. Montenegro is a much smaller province, but its inhabitants are brave, warlike, and much opposed to Turkish rule. Should their example be followed by Roumania, the war will assume most serious proportions, and a peaceful solution of the difficulty, without the partition of the Ottoman dominions in Europe, become well-nigh impossible. THE DUGA PASS The Duga Pass, the scene of the late nevere engagements in Herzegovina, has often played a part in former wars, and here one of the greatest French generals laid the foundation of his fame. In 1789 the Austrion General Alvinczy's corps was beaten by the Turks, and retired through the Duga-Pass to join the main body of the army at Nevesinic. The brigade suffered dreadfully from the rayabs and begs, who hurled down stones from the beights as the troops passed through the defile. At one place, the socalled "Death's Hoad," where the pass scarcely thirty feet broad, the troops suffered so severely that the remains of the two regiments throw down their arms in despair. A young captain, however, with a few volunteers, climbed the "Death's Head," drove away the Turks, and thus saved a portion of the Austrian troops. In 1790 the same brigade marched to Luxembourg; the captain there challenged another officer, although duciling was strictly forcidden by the Emperor Joseph II. He was obliged to take flight, and entered the French service, where, as Kleber, he has won a lasting place in

The mutual jealousies of European kingdoms have kept Mahommo danism from falling with hand, destined, as she is, to be broken without hand (Dan. viii. 25). Fearful of the consequences of its dissolution, the Great Powers have long decreed the maintaining of "the integrity of the Ottoman Empire," and the attempt has cost Britain dear. Now (February, 1876), all the Five Powers are agreed that it shall be fulfilled-"He shall come to his end, and none shall help him." The last two verses of Dan. xi., yet to be fulfilled, are as precise as the first, and as true as the preceding prodictions, which have all become accomplished nets History has vet to follow prophecy step by step.
